For the first time in his short noisy life, Little Quacker was too surprised to make even a faint squawk. He stood at the edge of Farmer Brown's pond and stared silently at the strange figure on the opposite bank. Never had he seen such a sight.

The stranger was shaped like a duck and was about his own size and age. It waddled like a duck. It quacked like a duck. But it was not yellow like a duck.

IT WAS BRIGHT RED!

Its color was even brighter and redder than the flowers in Farmer Brown's garden or the fire engine that had come the day the haystack had burned.

Della Duck waddled out of the tall grass near him. "I hoped you'd come for a swim this morning, Little Quacker," she said. "I want you to meet my nephew, Dandy. He's visiting me for a while."

"You mean, that's really a duck?" Little Quacker croaked, pointing to the scarlet stranger. "I never saw a red duck before!"

"Nobody has," Della sighed sadly. "Dandy's color is an accident. He sneaked into Farmer Jones's tool shed and fell into a can of red paint. Farmer Jones chased him out of the barnyard. Now everybody laughs at him and he's called 'the Red Demon'."

Della paused and sighed again. "The red color has completely changed Dandy. He used to be quiet and well-mannered. Now he's a noisy smart aleck, and refuses to wash off the paint. He prances around, showing off, too, and won't go near the water."

Little Quacker sighed in sympathy, but, secretly, he wished his own feathers were glittering scarlet, instead of soft yellow.

"His mother, my poor sister, is sick with shame," Della went on. "So I brought Dandy here, hoping strangers can make him see how silly he's acting."

Then Della introduced the two little ducks and left them together on the bank of the pond.

"I'll bet I'm the only red duck you ever saw," Dandy grinned proudly, strutting up and down. "Everybody looks at me!"

"That's right," Little Quacker agreed. "Red's a swell color. Only trouble is, you'll have a hard time hiding, if a hawk or a weasel or a fox tries to catch you."

Dandy uttered a scornful quack. "I'm not afraid of hawks or weasels or foxes, or even farmers! Nobody can catch me!"

The two little ducks heard startled clucks and squawks and saw a crowd of barnyard folks rushing toward the pond. They stared in astonishment, as Dandy paraded before them in his scarlet splendor.

Suddenly, Henrietta Hen screamed, "WEASEL," and the crowd scattered in a flurry.

Little Quacker jumped into the safety of the pond, but Dandy darted into the grasses.

When Little Quacker came up for air, he saw Dandy, moving like a bright red ball in the reeds, followed by a slinking weasel.

"Dandy!" Little Quacker yelled. "Run for the pond! The weasel's ready to grab you!"

Dandy turned and saw the gleaming eyes close behind him. With a terrified quack, he ran to the pond and dived into the water.

Later, when the barnyard folks returned to the pond, they saw two little yellow ducks, paddling quietly on the water.

"Where's the red duck?" Henrietta cried.

"Here he is!" Little Quacker laughed, pointing to the butter-colored Dandy. "He decided it was better to be yellow and safe than red and sorry."
